Why seeking financial advice is the best call you'll ever make

Know your game plan

Many people are missing out on opportunities for investment, pension and wealth planning because they don't know how to track down trustworthy financial advice

Colin Randall

More than 18 million people in Britain who could benefit from professional financial advice are not seeking it, according to research for the Financial Conduct Authority (FCA). A report for the regulator's Financial Advice Market Review in 2018 reinforces the sector's belief that working people across the UK – and not just the very wealthy – are in need of help with financial planning. It found that of 46.5 million adults who had not obtained regulated advice, nearly 40 per cent had savings or investments of at least £10,000 “and therefore might have a need for advice”. VouchedFor.co.uk – a ratings site that lists financial and legal professionals, and helps people access the best available advice at all stages of life – has accumulated more than 100,000 verified client reviews and conducts its own extensive checks and monitoring. Its key objectives are to “demystify the advice landscape”, help consumers understand the value of good advice and make them confident about seeking it. It's worth noting that the number of people receiving regulated advice on investments, pensions or retirement planning rose sharply from 3.2 million in 2017 to 4.5 million last year. But as the FCA report points out, that still only accounts for about one in ten UK adults. Among the given reasons for the low uptake are expense, uncertainty and lack of trust about the quality of advice offered. This underlines the challenges facing professionals as they try to convince people that even those with relatively modest incomes and savings have something to gain. The situation hasn't been helped by the 2017 British Steel pensions mis-selling scandal, which rocked confidence in the financial advice sector. After British Steel owner Tata restructured its pension fund, thousands of scheme members were targeted by “vulture” financial advisers, many losing out in the process. However, VouchedFor says the fallout from such isolated cases should be viewed against a background of countless examples of sound advice providing “financial uplift across a variety of common life events”. Rebecca Aldridge is a chartered financial planner and managing director of Nottingham-based Balance: Wealth Planning. As one of VouchedFor's listed advisers, she says: “There is a wide spectrum of people who need advice.

CHECKLIST

LIFE EVENTS WHEN YOU MIGHT SEEK FINANCIAL ADVICE

- Buying a home mortgage advice
- Starting a family life insurance, junior ISAs, school fee funds
- Starting investing ISAs, investment advice
- Starting a business funding, auto-enrolment/pensions
- Bereavement or getting divorced holistic financial advice
- Nearing retirement take advantage of pension freedoms, equity release and annuities
- Leaving a legacy inheritance tax plans

“What people actually think can be a quite different matter, though. What I see is younger people – particularly millennials – who do not identify as needing such advice. Even if they do, they are much more likely to try to do it for themselves.” Aldridge believes professionals need to overcome this scepticism by “bending and changing” the way they offer services. Her own response has been to launch Neon Financial Planning, an online subsidiary catering for under-45s – her own age bracket. “There is a misconception that financial planning is all about investing money,” she says. “We must focus on the predominant objective of restructuring wealth in order to make the best of it: minimising taxation, having your money in the right place, and having the structure to ensure you have enough – and will continue to do so in the future.”

How to pop the right questions

When you decide to seek financial or mortgage advice, you want an expert you can trust to make the most of your money. Here are the key questions you should ask...

VouchedFor's online adviser profiles include minimum wealth levels and mortgage sizes. You will also soon be able to run a keyword search through adviser reviews – such as “divorce” – to find ones left by people in a similar situation to yourself.

Why is the product that you picked the best one for me?

Supply anything you think is relevant, as your adviser can only recommend products for you (such as mortgage, investments and pensions) based on the information you've provided. Do ask why the product they have recommended is the most appropriate – so that you feel comfortable with your decision. Always bear in mind there may be alternatives that, upon closer inspection, you would prefer to go with.

What do you do that I couldn't do myself?

With the rise of multiple online services, it's important to know how your adviser can benefit your situation above what an automated service can offer you.

It may be tempting to use online services, such as “robo-advice” companies that offer investment and pension advice. However, a financial adviser should be able to discuss the additional services and assistance they can provide. For example, many advisers specialise in particular scenarios, such as helping you to understand how much you might want to draw down from your pension. Practical expertise and the human touch can make a huge difference to ensuring you hit all of your financial and personal goals.

Similarly, when speaking with a mortgage adviser, they will be able to discuss the full intricacies of your mortgage, so do be open with them. It is their job to advise you on which type of mortgage is the most suitable for you. They will factor in your whole financial situation, and will be able to display the full costs involved.

They are also usually able to secure better deals than those that are available on comparison sites; the latter will not show the full complexity of why each product is (or isn't) suited to you. The sites also might not include application charges that arise down the line.

A good mortgage or financial adviser will be able to provide validation and give you peace of mind that no stone has been left unturned.

What services do you provide?

A financial adviser will let you know whether they are “independent” or “restricted” (see our Jargon Buster, below). They will generally be able to assist with preparing for retirement, building a pension pot, investments and inheritance planning. You may find that some financial advisers can also help with mortgages.

A mortgage adviser will let you know whether they are “whole of market” or “limited”. They can typically help with first-time buyers, remortgaging, buy-to-let properties, insurance and protection, and moving home. An adviser must be clear with regard to what services they offer.

Search for the advisers listed in the tables on pages 7-15. In addition, you can find further services and advice they offer on VouchedFor.co.uk.

Why are you suitable for me?

You want to work with someone who fills you with confidence and whose knowledge, skills and advice you trust to be both accurate and in your best interests. Any adviser should be able to list their key attributes and state why they are someone you can rely on. You can also look at their testimonials and reviews from clients they have worked with.

How, and how much, do you charge clients?

When considering whether to take advice, what it will cost will probably be one of your first concerns. An adviser must explain how much they will charge before you are taken on as a client.

Mortgage advisers may charge in different ways: an upfront fee, payment through commission on the mortgage loan, or a combination of both.

Many financial advisers charge a percentage of the value of your investment or pension pot. Fee structures can be complicated, so ask exactly what you'll pay based on your wealth and requirements.

By knowing how fees are charged you may get a better deal

It's important to have this clear in your mind as early as possible. By understanding how fees are charged, it may even be possible to negotiate a better deal for yourself.

Do you have experience of people in a situation similar to my own?

It is not uncommon for an adviser to only work with clients who have a minimum wealth level or mortgage size. For instance, if you have £20,000 in savings, but your potential financial adviser generally deals with people who have £500,000, you may be better off with someone who has more experience assisting those in a similar financial situation to you.

The same applies with personal circumstances. Major life events such as births, divorce, bereavement and critical illness can add a further level of complexity to your financial situation and it might be helpful to find advisers who have experience in these areas.

Inheritance tax...what the fugu?

There's no doubt about it, estate planning can seem like a complicated and slippery animal. Fortunately, at Octopus Investments we work with your financial adviser to slice, dice and serve up a tasty plan of action much quicker than it takes a sushi grandmaster to learn the art of filleting the world's deadliest dinner.

Of course, no “arigato” is required. Although we do insist you consider the possibility that if you invest with Octopus, the value of your investment can fall or rise, and you may not get back the full amount you invest.

To get started, talk to your financial adviser about how inheritance tax may impact you and your family.

JARGON BUSTER

Definitions for financial and mortgage advisers can be confusing. This guide will help you understand what you're dealing with.

INDEPENDENT FINANCIAL ADVISER

An independent financial adviser can advise across all investment and pension matters relevant to their clients.

FOCUSED INDEPENDENT FINANCIAL ADVISER

Focuses on specific investment and pension matters. Within these areas of advice, the adviser is in no way limited in the products they can recommend.

RESTRICTED FINANCIAL ADVISER

They can advise across a limited set of investment and pension products.* This limitation may enable them to offer an improved service and lower fees, but you should consider how other products compare.

WHOLE OF MARKET MORTGAGE ADVISER

Can advise across a range of available mortgage products. Ask whether they check lenders' direct-only deals (ie, those available only directly to consumers from the lender, without going through an adviser).

LIMITED MORTGAGE ADVISER

Can advise across a limited set of mortgages.* This limitation might enable them to offer an improved service and lower fees – but do also consider how other products compare.

*Product restrictions are often because the adviser can only recommend products provided by the company they work for, but this is not always the case. It is important to ask the adviser about any restrictions on the advice they can offer and how this can affect you.

How much should financial guidance cost?

A new era of transparency is dawning with experts being more upfront about fees and exactly what clients can expect for their money

Laura Brodeur

Whether we have just had a baby, or waved a child off to university, are planning to retire or have been bereaved, we need help when managing our capital across the different stages of life. For many, however, seeking financial guidance from a qualified adviser can seem a daunting process, not least because it's hard to tell what represents good value for money. How much should we be paying for life insurance, having a mortgage arranged or getting advice on investing in an individual saving account (ISA)? It is difficult to find out what such help should cost. This is because many advisers do not publicise their fees online, and even when you get the information their different charging structures can be poorly explained and hard to compare.

This is why, in June 2018, the ratings site VouchedFor decided to let advisers upload information on their fees for all to see. This means that when users are reading reviews of advisers on the site to find one suitable for their financial situation, they can compare prices clearly and unambiguously. In the past six months, 47 per cent of VouchedFor's top rated advisers have added their fees. This is evidence, the site says, that the desire for transparency is actually coming from the advisers themselves. The beneficiaries of such a move are consumers. "Fee transparency is a vital step in giving millions of Britons who could benefit from financial advice the confidence to engage," says Alex Whitson, managing director of VouchedFor. "The key word here is value and it's important that consumers get to grips with how an adviser's fee structure and services align with their needs."

Free initial consultation
Most financial advisers offer this to establish how they can help, and must then make it clear what they can do for you and at what cost.

Initial fees
One-off or ad hoc charges for advice can vary from 0.5 to 5 per cent of the assets you wish to invest. The average initial fee submitted to the site is 1.74 per cent.

Ongoing charges
These are ongoing yearly fees you pay your adviser for looking after your investments, ranging from 0 to 2 per cent. The average ongoing fee (based on all fee structures uploaded to VouchedFor.co.uk) is 0.79 per cent but varies depending on the service you are looking for, whether you have assets to invest and what kind of advice you seek.

Average total charges
Translating percentage fees into pounds and pence can be difficult, which is why some advisers charge a pre-agreed fixed fee for their work. The initial and ongoing percentage

It really does pay to shop around for an adviser who can bring value to your cash and investments fees, and fixed fee structures uploaded to VouchedFor produce an average advice cost of £6,079 for an investment of £100,000 over five years. Some advisers charge by the hour; expect to pay on average about £180. Keep value in mind when calculating fees.

Financial plan
It's hard to provide a clear sliding scale when the parameters vary so much. A financial plan for someone with few savings, a reasonable income and one pension, who simply wants clarity on their goals and whether they are on track for retirement, might range from £0 to £500. On the other hand, a financial plan for a client with a complex situation, such as business interests, multiple pensions and investments, plus inheritance tax planning needs might cost as much as £10,000.

Stocks and shares ISA
To open one of these, you'd pay about 3.79 per cent of the amount invested as an average initial fee. That means if you were to invest the annual ISA limit of £20,000, there would be a cost of £758. You would then pay an average 0.84 per cent of the amount invested as an ongoing charge.

Pensions
Pensions can be complicated. Pension advice is typically charged in the same way as investment advice, a pension is after all just a tax-efficient wrapper for your investments. Advice on a pension pot of £250,000 would typically cost £13,925 over 5 years, including initial and ongoing advice fees.

Mortgages
Some mortgage advisers charge no upfront advice fee, taking their fee out of commission from the lender instead. Where they do charge an upfront advice fee it averages £356, however, this all depends on the complexity and size of the mortgage.

VouchedFor's Whitson says: "People expect to be able to see what something will cost them, or at least get a ballpark figure, financial advice is no different."

'The advice that put our finances back on track'

When Karen and Mark Broadhead needed advice about pensions and paying off their mortgage they turned to VouchedFor. What followed tied up loose ends, uncovered opportunities and gave peace of mind

Karen Broadhead, 57, a sales representative for a gift company, and her husband Mark, 56, a director for a shopping centre, realised that with retirement looming they had to get their financial affairs in order. They knew they wanted to consolidate pensions from previous jobs and address their larger than desired mortgage in order to safeguard their future, without impacting their outgoing lifestyles. "We live in a wonderful village, Warmington, in Northamptonshire, and will have been there for four years in July," says Karen. "We've been lucky enough to make a lot of friends here and love going to our local pub. We are social animals and it's fair to say that comes at a price, hence even more of a need to make sure we can continue our way of life once we retire. "Also, our daughter Emma lives away from Warmington and at some stage it would be good to be close to her, something that would obviously involve a house move." So where should they turn to for help and advice? Karen tried searching online in her local area for a financial adviser, but was wary about approaching someone completely cold, having never visited a financial adviser before. "You're never sure of what people are going to try to sell you," she says. "You hear horror stories and I needed reassurance that the person I was going to talk to wasn't going to run off with our pension. When you are putting all your finances and pensions into somebody's hands, you need to trust them and you want to know from the start that the person is reliable." She discovered VouchedFor via an online recommendation on MoneySavingExpert. Impressed with its transparency, she could instantly access personal reviews on VouchedFor for financial advisers in her area, reassuring her that they came recommended.

Of course, it's natural to put off dealing with your finances, but as Karen explains: "I think financial and retirement planning is something that many people don't consider, none of us like to think we'll ever be that old. But it comes to us all." She says it was helpful to see what other financial issues and life stages – for example, how to prepare for retirement – had been addressed by advisers and what she might be able to ask about. Reviews included information about why a person originally sought help, whether they achieved the outcome they'd hoped for and what an adviser might have done better. Calum O'Donnell, a chartered financial planner at AMAS Investments in Bury St Edmunds, Suffolk, was the independent adviser she approached. Today, Karen declares herself delighted with the decision, saying he has been "absolutely fantastic" and "nothing has been too much trouble". Initially, she contacted him through VouchedFor. Within 24 hours he had responded and arranged a meeting. He visited the Broadheads at their home on several occasions – and they are still in touch. The couple approached Calum with "the usual bag of paperwork". But he didn't open it, instead taking his preferred approach of asking what it was Karen and Mark were most concerned about, and what they hoped to achieve. They wanted to address how to consolidate their pensions, retire early, deal with an inheritance and pay off what at their stage in life was still a large mortgage. Calum reviewed their current and future income against outgoings to quantify their basic, leisure and luxury expenditure, and analysed their cashflow. "We love our holidays and usually try to get away two to three times a year,

Financial makeover:
Mark and Karen
Broadhead

He helped us focus on how much we would need to retire plus long weekends," says Karen. "Two of our holidays this year are UK-based so that we can be together with Emma, her partner Rowan and our granddog Lola. We've also been able to comfortably support our daughter through university and teacher training so far." Karen says organising the family's financial affairs has given them the freedom to enjoy other pursuits away from work. The couple enjoy weekends away and have a list of places they want to tick off in their retirement. "When you're working, there's limited time to fit in everything you'd like to do," she explains, adding that she sees retirement "as golf for Mark and my learning to play so that I'm not a golf widow".

After a review, Calum recommended consolidating Mark's pension to a single wrapper with a uniform investment strategy. He also helped the couple with mortgage advice, reducing their home loan and securing a more competitive rate, using the inheritance to reduce some of the mortgage. Moreover, he advised on tax returns, tax-advantaged savings and income protection. "Following a bereavement while we were being advised by Calum, we received a lump sum of money," says Karen. "We were desperate to pay off our mortgage, however, Calum suggested that some of it could be invested in a better way to meet our end goals and use our money to our best advantage." The advice Karen has received from Calum has far exceeded her expectations and shown her the value of seeking good financial guidance. "He was open and honest about the costs involved, too. "He helped us see how much we needed to live on when we retire and really gave us focus and a goal. It will save us tens of thousands of pounds. "The financial help that Calum has given us is second to none – without it we would quite honestly have been clueless as to how we stood financially in terms of our retirement. It has been invaluable to us." LB

Charged at 40 per cent, your inheritance tax (IHT) liability can take a chunk out of what you are able to leave to your heirs. They won't have to pay any tax if your estate is worth less than £325,000 – known as the “nil rate band” – or in certain circumstances £450,000 if it includes your home.

The tax is payable on estates valued above these thresholds – and in many parts of the country the average home is worth more. The Treasury doubled the amount it received in IHT between 2010 and 2018 with rising house prices bringing more families into that band.

In addition to the market value of your house, your estate is the sum of your savings, investments and other assets (which can range from jewellery to cars).

The headache for many families is that they end up paying far more IHT than they need to. But by seeking the right financial advice in good time for your own situation, it is possible to reduce or even eliminate a liability.

While such preparation is perfectly legal – and makes good financial sense – too many don't understand the complexities of the IHT system. They therefore fail to protect themselves, or to get expert advice on how to do so.

One of the lesser-known tax-efficient measures you can turn to is Business Property Relief, a government-approved relief from IHT.

“There is a common perception that inheritance tax is something that affects only the wealthiest people, but with the nil rate band frozen, and given the house price rises of recent years, more and more families are being affected,” warns Paul Latham, the managing director of Octopus Investments.

“It doesn't have to be that way: with careful planning and expert financial advice, many people could substantially reduce their exposure to inheritance tax.”

1 Write your will to make the best use of the nil rate bands

The nil rate band – which currently stands at £325,000 – is the amount of wealth you can pass on with no IHT liability. There is an additional allowance called the “residence nil rate band” which applies to the value of your home. In the current financial year, this band effectively increases your total IHT-free allowance to £450,000 – and this will rise to £500,000 in 2020–21.

When married couples and civil partners leave assets to one another, this wealth is free from IHT. Also, both get their own nil rate band and residence nil rate band, which they can leave to one another if they don't use them.

It's important therefore for couples to write their wills in the same way. By leaving their money and assets to each other, they'll ensure not only that there's no IHT to pay when the first partner dies, but also that the estate they leave pays less tax when the second partner passes away.

2 Spend more of your money

Spending more of your wealth before you die will reduce the value of your estate and any liability faced by your heirs. Still, tread carefully. You need to ensure you have enough money to live on in later life.

3 Make the most of your IHT allowances

By making gifts, you'll reduce the value of what might be taxable when you die. Currently, you can make as many small gifts, worth up to £250, as you like. Each year you can also make larger gifts up to a total of £3,000. If you don't use this full allowance, you can carry the unused portion into the next financial year.

4 Give more wealth away

Even if you've exhausted your ordinary gift allowances, you can still make “potentially exempt transfers”. They're only potentially exempt because if you die within seven years of making such a gift, it could be counted as part of your estate.

Careful planning and expert advice can make a real difference

5 Use discretionary trusts

A trust enables you to set aside assets for your heirs while maintaining control over when and how these bequests will be distributed – usefully, wealth held within a trust is normally free of IHT. However, in some cases, there may be tax charges when you set up the trust or on an ongoing basis. You also have to live for seven years after moving assets into a trust for them to be IHT exempt.

6 Take out whole-of-life insurance

Life insurance pays an agreed sum to specified beneficiaries on the death of the policyholder, so this could be a way to help your heirs cover the cost of an IHT bill that you haven't already eliminated. Clearly, it is important to keep paying the premiums on such policies. Take financial advice on how much cover to buy, given your family's exposure to tax, and on where to find the best-value insurance.

7 Investigate incentives, such as business property relief (BPR)

BPR is an example of a government tax-planning incentive where you invest in qualifying assets, such as shares in certain companies. If you hold on to them for at least two years, your heirs won't have to pay any IHT when they receive these assets on your death. With tax legislation changing all the time it's important to be aware that an investor's tax benefit will depend on their circumstances, and that tax reliefs can change. Investments in companies that qualify for relief from IHT may be harder to sell than shares listed on the main London Stock Exchange. As well as seeking advice when planning for your estate, the usual risks on investments apply.

8 Leave money to charity

Any assets you leave to charity in your will fall outside the IHT net. If you are able to leave 10 per cent or more of your total estate to charity, the IHT rate paid by your heirs (if there is still a tax bill to settle) drops to 36 per cent.

8 ways to cut your inheritance tax liability

Think inheritance tax doesn't apply to you? Think again. Planning what you leave to your heirs is increasingly an issue for many families

Inheritance tax... what the fugu?

There's no doubt about it, estate planning can seem like a complicated and slippery animal. Fortunately, at Octopus Investments we work with your financial adviser to slice, dice and serve up a tasty plan of action much quicker than it takes a sushi grandmaster to learn the art of filleting the world's deadliest dinner.

Of course, no "arigato" is required. Although we do insist you consider the possibility that if you invest with Octopus, the value of your investment can fall or rise, and you may not get back the full amount you invest.

To get started, talk to your financial adviser about how inheritance tax may impact you and your family.
